Phone Investigation Recording

Staff: Hello, hello

Investigator: Hello, is this Red Cross Society of China Jiangsu Branch, the provincial Red Cross?

Staff: Yes, yes.

Investigator: Is this the organ donation office?

Staff: Hey, right, right.

Investigator: I want to know whether your [donated] organs are only for your local hospitals, or can they be distributed to other places?

Staff: This is not under our control. There is a distribution system belonging the Ministry of Health. The [organs] would be compared. After that, they would be assigned [to different hospitals] by computers. So I couldn’t say whether they are used locally or at other places, because it’s not managed by us.

Investigator: Then what role do you play? Isn’t the Red Cross in charge of the distribution of organs?

Staff: Donations, donations, and the coordination of donations.

Investigator: Oh?

Staff: From donations to procurement. After the organs are procured, the distribution is done by the Ministry of Health, which runs the management system.

Investigator: Does it just cover your local area or something else?

Staff: The local area is given the priority, definitely it is given the priority.

Investigator: Oh, how many organ donations do you receive here?

Staff: Ah, [the number is] so, not particularly a lot, just so so.

Investigator: As I know, our Chinese people are relatively particular about their organs. We have very few [donated organs] here. Then how many donations did you receive last year? Or were there any donations?

Staff: We received about 80 cases last year.

Investigator: Oh, are these 80 cases registrations or successful donations?

Staff: Successful donations. Successful donations.

Investigator: Oh, more than 80 cases, that's it. Since we hadn't heard too much about donations in the past...can you still find that type of [organs from] [Falun] Gong practitioners through the judicial system?

Staff: I do not know about this. I really don't know about this. That's not under our management.

Investigator: Oh, you are just responsible for registration. How many donated organs have you got this year, the successful donations?

Staff: Ah, about 30 or 40 cases.

Investigator: 30 or 40 cases? But not all of these organs can be used [for transplants], right? You have to take [the donors'] ages and health conditions into consideration, right?

Staff: Yes, yes.

Investigator: Is it that what gets registered is that number [of successful donations], but the application rate of these organs in transplants is not 100% after the registration?

Staff: Ah, about this, we haven't done the statistics regarding the utilization ratio of registered donated organs. There is no way for us to do statistics, ah.

Investigator: Oh, in the past, you did not participate in organ donations, right?

Staff: We did not participate in those. Our organ donation [project] launched its national pilot in March 2010, when the organ donations first started.

Investigator: Oh, oh, the Red Cross started [the donations by that time].

Staff: Ah, we do not know about the previous work.

Investigator: Oh, oh yes, so this is the case, uh

Staff: In this area, well.
