Phone Investigation Recording

Doctor on duty: Hello.

Investigator: Hi, is this the General Hospital of Chinese People's Armed Police Forces?

Doctor on duty: Yes.

Investigator: I'd like to ask. A family member of mine needs to have a kidney transplant. Is your hospital still doing it?

Doctor on duty: What? Your family member wants to do a kidney transplant, so?

Investigator: Oh, because our local doctor has suggested us to ask the hospitals in Beijing, such as the General Hospital of Chinese People's Armed Police Forces, which does a lot of organ transplants. So, I'm calling you to make an inquiry.

Doctor on duty: You can also bring the checkup results from your local hospital to register at our hospital. Let our chief physician take a look and evaluate, to see if his condition is suitable for an organ transplant operation.

Investigator: Oh, is it still Director Wang Jianli, who's performing the surgeries?

Doctor on duty: Yes, chief physician Wang Jianli.

Investigator: Oh, which means...

Doctor on duty: Make an appointment with him. He's available to see outpatients every Wednesday and Thursday afternoon. He's available tomorrow afternoon for outpatient services.

Investigator: Oh, all are afternoons. I'd like to ask, doctor, is your hospital doing a lot of organ transplants nowadays? How many kidney transplants did you do last year, for instance?

Doctor on duty: In one year, we can do more than 200 cases.

Investigator: More than 200 cases, more than other hospitals, right?

Doctor on duty: Yes, definitely. [This number] is just for one of our teams. Both of our teams can do more than 500 cases altogether each year.

Investigator: Oh...

Doctor on duty: We have two teams.

Investigator: What are the two teams? Two wards?

Doctor on duty: Two different chief physicians are in charge.

Investigator: Oh, I know there's Chief Physician Liu Hang working at your hospital, as well.

Doctor on duty: Yes, right.

Investigator: One chief physician would do more than 200 cases, and two chief physicians, do they do [operations] separately?

Doctor on duty: Yes.

Investigator: How many wards are there in your hospital? Just this one? Or two?

Doctor on duty: We have the liver transplant team and the kidney transplant team. And there are several chief physicians in the liver transplant team.

Investigator: Wow, so the kidney transplant only has one ward, right?

Doctor on duty: We are all in the same ward, just different doctors being in charge of different [operations].

Investigator: Oh, so liver and kidney [transplant teams] are in the same large ward, belonging to the transplantation...

Doctor on duty: Yes.

Investigator: Oh...

Doctor on duty: They all belong to our Organ Transplantation Department.

Investigator: Oh, I see. Then, as they are all in one large ward, there must be a lot of ward beds available, right.

Doctor on duty: Yes.

Investigator: Is the wait time for liver transplantation shorter than for kidney? It seems that your liver transplantation...

Doctor on duty: This, um, [Investigator: Not necessarily?] I cannot tell you. Because the wait time...the later you start, the longer you'll wait for sure. It's hard to say.

Investigator: Alright, then I...

Doctor on duty: We cannot always tell you all this information.

Investigator: Why? Because...

Doctor on duty: You can see the information online, to see our workload. It's all online.

Investigator: Ok, alright, alright, thank you! Thank you! Hmm, okay, bye. Bye.
